

ABSTRACT

A method for indexing and coding element information of at least one biological element provided on a microarray chip thereby identifying the microarray chip. Some of the element spots arranged on the microarray chip are used as index spots to be selectively provided with at a detective colorant. By doing so, the microarray chip is specified, and the element information as well as experimental information of the chip is automatically managed.